

Editorial

The recent developments at international level overwhelmed in uncertainties the forecasts of everybody, from ordinary people to major political figures or leading international institutions. Now, more than ever before, is a time when solutions for economic, social and political issues have to be interdisciplinary in approach, structure and implementation.

In this context, we are happy to continue the series of scholarly papers in our journal, presenting some aspects that have interdisciplinarity dimensions.

The Editorial team expresses its gratitude to contributors for their papers and to the reviewers for their efforts in evaluating the work of prestigious authors from Romania and abroad. The interesting ideas expressed in the present number of the European Journal of Interdisciplinary Studies are the results of preoccupations of academics, researchers and doctoral students who are approaching different topics from economics to political science.

We hope that despite the difficult times we are passing through our journal will pursue its promising start, offering interesting papers for its readers.

Editor

Professor Rodica Milena Zaharia, PhD
The Bucharest Academy of Economic Studies, Romania